

Abstract of the Disclosure

The present invention relates to a device for separating the cornea of the eye and in particular the cornea and a method for using the same. The device includes a head portion adapted to reciprocate, and a wire attached to the head portion. The wire is adapted to separate the cornea into first and second surfaces, which form a flap in the cornea of the eye.